Description:

In literature as well as in horror movies, mummies often teach us to be creeped out. The animated standing figure from Europalms is no exception and absolutely lives up to its reputation:

The gauze cloths used in the embalming process seem to be firmly fused to the skull of the animated decorative figure, revealing only a small glimpse of the mouth, nose and deep eye sockets. The original robe of the body, from which skeletonized arms and feet protrude, is still well preserved and a coarse-meshed cover lies over the head and torso of the mummy. Through a built-in mechanism, the mummy's arms move forward and backward, while the head performs circular movements. Red flashing LEDs in the eye sockets and an eerie laugh complete the animation.

By integrated microphone, the switch pad "Step here" or wired, manual control, the animation of the decorative figure can be activated.

The power supply of the Halloween figure can be via battery operation, USB-A cable for 5 V operation via power bank or power adapter.
